Composting Cooperative of North Hempstead

Instructional composting lessons offered at Clark Botanic Gardens

North Hempstead recently launched Long Island's first composting cooperative at Clark Botanic Gardens. The program benefits the environment by helping to keep trash out of our solid-waste stream and returning valuable organic matter to the soil. As another facet of the Town's School Recycling Partnership Program, North Hempstead introduced the composting cooperative to the Henry Viscardi School (HVS) in Albertson – one of the nation's leading institutions for students with physical disabilities and health impairments. Residents can call 311 for more information on how to participate in the composting cooperative.
